New Bypass Eases Drive From Kelley to Patch

A recently completed bypass on the north side of Vaihingen significantly cuts the drive time between Kelley Barracks and Patch Barracks and Kelley Barracks and Robinson Barracks when Autobahn 8 is jammed.

The new road is a continuation of Nord-Süd Strasse through the Möhringen industrial area which then passes through a series of tunnels before exiting onto A-831 towards Stuttgart or towards Böblingen.

From Kelley, the fastest access to the bypass is from the A-8 far right exit lane between the B-27 Echterdingen interchange and the next exit, Möhringen-Vaihingen. Take that exit and follow the signs to Stuttgart Zentrum to the A-831 interchange. Take the left lane, following the signs to Singen and merge into A-831 traffic heading south. Take the first exit to Patch Barracks.

From Patch, take A-831 towards Stuttgart and then the first exit to get on the bypass. From the bypass, drivers can exit toward Möhringen or cross over A-8 and follow the signs to B-27. A word of caution: Although the bypass usually has little traffic, the speed limit through the tunnels is only 50 kilometers per hour.

Soldiers Get Re-Enlistment Bonuses

Due to a decline in the amount of soldiers with airborne specialties, soldiers who hold an airborne specialty in their military occupational skill can now re-enlist for a bonus. Beginning Sept. 1, 68 airborne specialties were added to the 13 already qualifying for re-enlistment bonuses, which brings the total to 81.

The re-enlistment bonuses are being offered in both A and B Zones. Zone A includes first termers (21 months to six years of service, predominantly junior-enlisted soldiers), and Zone B includes soldiers with six to 10 years of service (mostly NCOs).

Bonuses are calculated by multiplying base pay with the years of re-enlistment. The re-enlistment must be for three years or more. Two-year re-enlistments don't qualify. The maximum amount of money for any re-enlistment bonus remains at $20,000.

For status of openings/closings during severe weather conditions call 421-2474/civ. 0711-729-

Be Careful When Selecting Toys

Christmas is a time for joy not sorrow, so take extra precaution when selecting toys for children and ensure that they are age-appropriate. Many toys are duplicates of the real thing and parents need to ensure that they are properly used and not misused.

Children sometimes put the wrong parts of toys in their mouths and some end up swallowing the tiny pieces that come off, choking on the part. Inquisitive minds will often take dolls and other toys apart, exposing themselves to sharp pins or other dangerous parts.

Parents are charged with ensuring that children are supervised when playing with toys, selecting toys that are suitable for the age, abilities and temperament of the child, and to thoroughly check all toys. Infants and toddlers should have toys too large to be swallowed and have no sharp edges, hidden pins or wires. Young children should have toys with no parts that can be pulled off and swallowed. Electrical toys should have an Underwriters' Laboratory label or similar stating that it has been tested and is safe to use.

Keep Christmas Trees Watered

Christmas trees become a fire hazard when they are not properly maintained. Cut trees tend to dry and become brittle quickly when the moisture level is not maintained. A person can tell if they are buying a well-maintained tree simply by bending the tips of the branches. If the tree is fresh, they should bend easily without snapping. Bounce the butt of the tree off the ground two or three times. If more than a few needles fall, the tree is too dry.

When the buyer gets the tree home, two or three inches of the trunk should be cut off, and stand the tree in a container of water in a cool place. Trees should not be placed near radiators and fireplaces. Water should be added to the tree every day to keep it from drying out and it should be unplugged when people leave the house or go to sleep. A dry tree is a fire waiting to happen.
